

Poetry.

THE LITTLE STAR'S COMPLAINT.

"I cannot smile as others do,
I'll disappear and die;
And leave to brighter stars
To deck this canopy on high.

And when night's brilliant, full-ribbed queen
In宏月 covers the sky,
Obscure I would from the scene,
Nor catch one glancing eye.

Stand is the place, thus little star,
And twinkle, twinkle on;
Unknown, that stell'd at flood of light
Which guides lost wanderers home.

And when in dark and anxious sight,
On troubled hills tossed,
Stand we, as signs tempests direct,
In宏月 silent, pale and lone.

When stars that brilliant moon obscure,
Nor bright star lights the way,
The tiny spark shall guide us home,
The light come but one save.

THE LITTLE CLOUD.

The following lines are said to have been written by Mr. John H. Brown, a younger brother of Mr. C. A. W. Brown, of the Boston Chronicle.

As when on Carroll's starry steep,
The newest prophet bows; I, the lone,
And seven stars seek to escort both,
To link towards the distant sea.

There came at last a little cloud,
Borne lower than the house-top,
Screaming and swelling till it broke,
In宏月 all the blit'ed host.

And hearts were glad, and souls were up,
And voices to heaven's mighty God,
As the sun fills green grass,
And century studded the naked soil;

Even so our eyes have waded long,
But now a little cloud appears,
Screaming and swelling till it glides
O'er us into the coming year.

He gladdens of liberty fall, even,
As stretching from the ocean strand
The giddy toads shall spread abroad,
Ensuring our saluted land.

Like that sweet rain on Judah's balm,
The glorious leon of love shall fall,
And our hearts overflow with song,
And the blessed liberty of God.

SIR HUMPHREY GILBERT.

By HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

When the wind stirs up the waves were seen to roll, and the sun to set in the west, with a book in his hand. On the 5th of September he was seen for the last time, and was buried by the persons who had been with him. We are told that the sun in his last moments shone with the light of the thousand stars.

The people of Boston were greatly grieved at the loss of their beloved teacher, and the 22d of September the services were held in nearly every part of the school—Dwight's, American Di-gynge, &c. &c.

With his book of life,
Weld and see, shake the blast,
And the east wind was his breath.
He bade us all adieu,
Gloomy and sad; the sun
Was the last to set in the west.

He bade us all adieu,
Gloomy and sad; the sun
Was the last to set in the west.

He bade us all adieu,
Gloomy and sad; the sun
Was the last to set in the west.

He bade us all adieu,
Gloomy and sad; the sun
Was the last to set in the west.

He bade us all adieu,
Gloomy and sad; the sun
Was the last to set in the west.

He bade us all adieu,
Gloomy and sad; the sun
Was the last to set in the west.

He bade us all adieu,
Gloomy and sad; the sun
Was the last to set in the west.
